Condo Pick of the Week: A Tribeca loft with sweeping views from every room

This four-bedroom, 3.5-bath apartment spans over 3,000 feet in Tribeca's Sky Lofts, a property that has previously attracted attention from the likes of Carmelo Anthony for its elegant condos. Converted from a prewar industrial building, today the units here feature high ceilings, large windows, and expansive views of downtown. This one is no exception, and is also tricked out with high-end fixtures and finishes; it's listed by CORE for $9.695 million.

A foyer opens onto the living space, which has enough square footage to throw some impressive parties, as well as 11-foot ceilings and massive casement windows bringing in lots of light. There's ample room for a separate, sunny dining area, and the open kitchen includes a breakfast bar, six-burner range, tasteful white tile backsplash, and separate pantry for extra storage.

The master bedroom's corner position guarantees that it will be bright, and there are electronic shades you can lower when you want to sleep in. You'll also find a walk-in closet, and a roomy, pristine-looking en suite bath with double sinks, a walk-in shower, and separate tub.

There are two more bedrooms adjacent to the master, each with their own closets and en suite baths. A fourth bedroom, off the living room, is currently configured as a study, with access to a half-bath off the kitchen.

There's also a washer and dryer in the apartment, and the building offers full-time doorman service and access to a shared roof deck. Plus, the location means you're mere blocks away from pretty much every subway line you could need.
