

June 21, 2016

Nate Berkus Just Sold His Sky-High Manhattan Penthouse

The designer and his husband sold the space for nearly double what Berkus paid for it in 2013

It should come as no surprise that design guru Nate Berkus is also a real estate mogul.

The interior designer has sold his Fifth Avenue penthouse apartment for $9.8 million to financier-slash-jewelry-designer Charles de Viel Castel, according to Luxury Listings NYC. That's nearly twice what he paid for the three bedroom, two-and-a-half bath pad in 2013, the Observer reports.

Highlights of the space include 10.5-foot coffered ceilings, three wood-burning fireplaces, a wrought-iron staircase, and a closet that is bigger than most apartments.

Rumor has it that Nate and his husband, Jeremiah Brent, could be on the hunt for a more kid-friendly home, but there's no word on where the family's heading next. It may not be too far away – the designer moved to this space from an apartment building just three blocks away, according to the Observer. One thing's for sure: It will be stylish beyond compare.